MISCELLANEOUS READING.

NIGHT THOUGHTS. Black, brooding night is o'er us! I almost hear the flutter of her wing, As she doth fan the sleeping earth. Upon my window-sill I lean, And look above. A few bright spots Now deck her sable plumage, All rest is dark!

Strange thoughts come to me! Strange, wearied, mystic thoughts, Of my life's Past and Future. The Past; 'tis strangely checkered, E'en like the night bird's bosom. Upward I look to the uncertain Future. Oh how I long to pierce it! To tear away its jetty robing, And look from earth's dim lighted path, 'Till it stops 'fore Heaven's high gate! Will it wend on through mead and vale, Or toil up mountain tops? Doperfumed flowers deck the pleasant path, Or doth it hang o'er some grim precipice ! Will it be my lot to tread the even way Of every-day existence, or maybap to gain By busy labor the world's renown? Shall I press onward thro' the maze of li'e To reverent age: or in fair budding youth

Pass from the world's great din, To rest beyond? Will earthly love its garland throw Around my head; or with locked heart, And undecked brow, live for a higher end, Even to glority His holy name, Whose servant I am called? Such are the thoughts that are passing O'er my heart's battle field Thicker and wilder new they rush, Like a retreating foe that flieth Before the conqueror's might! Some fall fore Reason's heavy blow. And some 'neath Conscience's quicker flash, Until the field is cleared. Reason and Right are victors now, And they shall keep what they have won. I am content to dwell

In the -weet blossomy fields Of what we call the Present. I turn away, and as I turn I hear A low, soft murmuring sound; And then the rustling of the sombre wing, And the night bird is flown. Now the white dove of morning With bosom crimson-tinged. Cometh from her far eastern home With gladsome tidings to earth dwellers Of another morn. A few brief hours And again the raven's starry breast, Will rest above, and with a softening note,

For the days' struggle and its strife. LA REVERIE. Dream Land, January 19th, 1858.

Will soothe man's aching heart.

THE BABIE. Nae shoon to hide her tiny tae. Nae stocking on her feet. Her supple ankles white as snaw, Or early blossoms sweet.

Her simple dress of sprinkled pink. Her double, dimpled chin, Her puckered lip and baumy mou, With na one tooth between.

Her een, sae like her mother's een,

Twa gentle liquid taines; Her face is like an angel's face-We're glad she has no wings. She is the budding o' our love, A gittie God gie'd us; We munna luve the gift ow'r weel, Twad be nae blessing thus.
